&lt;p&gt;Videostream was an application that enabled the streaming of video, music, and images wirelessly to Google's servers. It was developed by Google and used by millions of users. However, it was discontinued in 2004. The reason for this was that Google wanted to focus on its core business of providing search and advertising services. The discontinuation of Videostream was a significant loss for the company, as it had invested a lot of money in developing the application. However, Google's decision was ultimately based on its long-term strategy. The discontinuation of Videostream was a necessary step for Google to maintain its focus on its core business.
