Defining "cash out" and examples uses of "cash out"

The term "cash out" means withdrawing or converting into something of value. It is commonly used in different financial situations, such as the sale of digital currencies or assets.

The person who receives money for a service, right or asset that they own. The consequences of this act can be necessary and ruinous or advantageous, depending on the transaction individual.

When "cash out" is used, the consequences

can be:

In the financial markets, an executive can "cash out" large portions of their shares when their price is high.

It means exchanging their shares, or in other words, was invested in something that had potential future value. At the same time, it also means that they are obtaining money today, but losing any potential future gain from these assets.
